LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

The September residential sales statistics again demonstrate the slowing of the market. Expect to see a further slowdown as we encounter the typical fall slowing trend in the coming months. The decrease in market time, as well as the decrease in the number of new listings this month is good news for sellers. Buyers also have some good news since median sales price showed its first decrease since February. Although we are experiencing a leveling of the market as a whole, I disagree with the recent gloomy reports by certain national media outlets. Tucson continues to attract people from all over the United States because of our wonderful lifestyle choices, economy, weather, and scenic beauty. Tucson does not follow the trends of many larger cities. It's a great day to go shopping for a new home!

Sales Analysis

Median Sales Price Falls
After posting slight year-over-year increases for the past few months, the median sales price has finally fallen when compared to last year. The median sales price of $210,000 for September 2006 is $9,000 less (a decrease of 4.7%) than September 2005 and over $10,000 less than August 2006. This is good news for buyers who may have been waiting for a decrease in prices.

Home Sales Volume Falls From August
After increasing from July to August 2006, home sales volume has fallen approximately $97.3 million dollars from August to September 2006. This is a rather substantial decrease.

Days on Market Decreases From Last Month
The average days on market are up 66.67% from last September, increasing from 30 to 50 days. However, the average time on market has dropped three days since last month.

Average Sales Price
September 2006: $253,781

This is good news for buyers. Note that the September 2006 average price represents a $14,627 drop since last month, however with slowing sales it's necessary to wait for the trend to reveal itself over more time.

Median Sales Price

September 2006: $210,000

This is the big story this month, and is good news for buyers who may have been waiting. The median sales price has fallen $9,000 compared to September 2005. This is the first time this year the median price has fallen when compared to last year's prices.
